

Brisbane: water, power and industry

Edited by Carolyn Fitz-Gerald

This volume comprises sixteen papers on the development of Brisbane as an urban centre from the 1860s. The provision of public utilities such as water supply, power and transport saw the introduction of new technology and the rise of the professional engineer. However, the politics of the day did not always allow these developments a smooth path. Vignettes of some of Brisbane's early manufacturing industries are included.
